

Audi A2

Key recognition

On the above mentioned vehicle with climate control the settings of the air-conditioning system are stored automatically. When the vehicle is started, the system recognises the settings related to that particular key and sets the system to those settings. If several people use the vehicle, everybody should use a different key so that the respective personal settings of the air-conditioning system are used automatically.

Bulletin